Whether you're a blissfully happy, newly-engaged couple who are thoroughly enjoying getting stuck into the wedding planning side of things, or you're a slightly bitter, exhausted pair who just want to get the job done after endless pandemic-induced cancellations, chances are that those of you with a wedding anywhere relatively near in your future have put at least some thought to the honeymoon. If for nothing more than a break from seating plans and napkin shades...

But while the idea of planning the most romantic, indulgent holiday of your life sounds like an entirely blissful experience, you'll soon find that the pressure of it being 'the most romantic, indulgent holiday of your life' makes the decision-making process a more difficult one.

Do we want relaxation or adventure? Is there such thing as being too peaceful? Will we get bored? Will it be hot? Will it be too hot? What will the food be like? Will there be breathtaking views? Will we have privacy? Can we justify the cost? The napkins are beginning to sound like a walk in the park.

But may we make this process a little easier, and suggest you take a look at the Andronis Luxury Suites hotel in Santorini?

TRYFON GEORGOPOULOS

Built in traditional Greek-style and creating a jigsaw-like imprint on the iconic cliff face of the beautiful island, this hotel is situated in Santorini's most popular village of Oia - which is famed for playing host to the most photographed sunset scenes in the world. We're not exaggerating when we say in high-season certain spots have tourist queues lining up to get #theshot.

An ideal location which is just twenty minutes from the island's international airport and slap bang in the centre of Oia's pedestrian strip, it's ideal for those looking to explore the stunning village on foot. Chances are, though, once you step foot inside the hotel you won't be looking to leave.

All 29 suites and villas staggered down the cliff face feature the instantly-recognisable whitewashed architecture and form part of the iconic landscape for which Santorini is so well known. With private infinity pools and heated hot tubs aligning these suites - and a butler service that comes as standard in most of the beautifully-designer villas - there's actually no need to leave your room.

If you do decide to venture outside of your bedroom door, however, there is the most beautifully quaint and tranquil Mare Sanus Spa set within the shade of the cave-like nook built into the cliff face. With a team of experienced therapists on-hand offering treatments which include the exclusive Aegean Idyllic - created to be shared with your partner - it's the ultimate destination for a spot of intimate relaxation.

Just outside the spa entrance situated slightly further down the hotel is the infinity pool, with beds facing out across the vast expanse of Aegean Sea and the super chic Athena pool bar which offers elegant cocktails, fresh juices and snacks throughout the day.

When it comes to the gastronomic offering at Andronis Luxury Suites, however, poolside snacks - as delicious as they were - pale in comparison to the hotel's utterly breathtaking Lycabettus Restaurant.

An unexpectedly relaxed fine-dining experience perched on the world's most exquisitely romantic - and, according to National Geographic Traveller, famous - restaurant balcony, Lycabettus offers panoramic ocean views and a super unique, inspiring menu which incorporates incredible local ingredients and authentic flavours with unmatched flair and originality.

And if you're wondering whether such a centrally-located hotel can still have privacy, just know that the property has played host to Royal families from across the world, and every celebrity from the Kardashians to football players and NBA stars. The fact that their privacy was secure should answer your question...
