Why do I keep receiving prompts to print with Microsoft OneNote 2010 when I am using PressReader Print Software and have a dedicated printer?

What's happening?

Until recently, you've always been able to print anything from your computer to your printer. Now, your print jobs seem to suddenly bypass your printer completely and go straight into Microsoft OneNote, where they appear like scanned images. You really want things to go back to the way things were and have your print jobs sent to your actual printer.

What's causing it?

In a nutshell, the problem appears to be that OneNote 2010 intercepts all of your print jobs whenever you try to send any information from your other programs or your Web browser to your dedicated printer. Typically, the operating system controls such software, so it can monitor how a computer communicates with hardware devices, for example your printer. In the case of OneNote, a special print driver is installed that lets you send your print jobs as images into your OneNote notebooks.

How can I fix the bug?

Even if you're not really sure how it may have happened, there's an easy solution. On any edition of Windows 7, follow these steps, as shown in Fig. 10:

- 1. On the Windows taskbar, click the Start button.
- 2. On the right side of the Start menu, click Control Panel.
- 3. When Control Panel opens, click View Devices and Printers (if you're in Category view) or click Devices and Printers (if you're in Icon view).
- 4. Right-click the printer icon that represents your physical printer and then click Set as Default Printer on the shortcut menu.

If you're using Windows Vista, the steps are nearly identical:

- 1. On the Windows taskbar, click the Start button.
- 2. On the right side of the Start menu, click Control Panel.
- 3. When Control Panel opens, click Printer (if you're in Category view) or click Printers (if you're in Classic view).
- 4. Right-click the printer icon that represents your physical printer and set as Default Printer on the shortcut menu.

If you do not see an icon for your actual printer, it's likely that your printer is not correctly installed. Check the printer manufacturer's website for any updated drivers that are specific to your version of Windows (for example, a 64-bit edition of Windows) and make sure that the printer is properly connected to your computer.

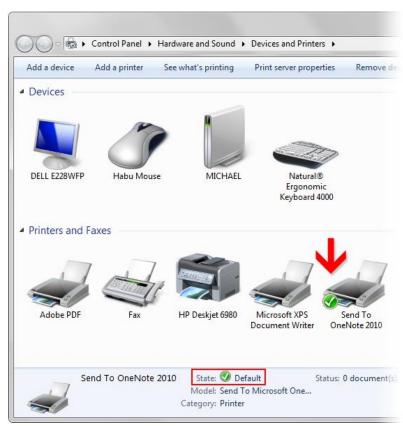

Fig. 10 Change the OneNote 2010 print driver to your actual dedicated printer.

When the Send to OneNote 2010 print driver is marked as shown, print jobs will be sent to OneNote as images.

If you have a real printer installed, right-click its icon, and then click Set as Default Printer on the shortcut menu.

Your printer is recognized as the preferred printer for future print jobs when it has the check mark icon next to it.

How do I customize the UI settings with PressReader?

The User Interface UI settings tab allows you to customize the manner in which you choose to read your newspaper within PressReader. UI settings are available under Options > Preferences > UI Settings. Readers can customize their reading modes by simply checking or unchecking the viewing options. The options available for customization include:

Enable Page-Flip Animation

Just like a printed newspaper, readers can choose to have the pages flipped.

Enable Zoom Animation

Zoom animation allows for a smooth gliding zoom-in to any page.

• Invert mouse drag direction

Reverse the direction the object moves as you navigate the pages.

Publication Expiry:

Downloaded publications can be saved on your hard drive only for a certain period of time. This period is determined by the publishers. Taking into account that downloaded publications are large in size (between 2 and 100 MB per issue), PressReader is set to save publications in your Library for up to seven days. You may change this setting in the Options > Preferences menu.

Please note:

Most home printers are capable of printing newspaper or magazine pages using PressReader. For correct and optimal printing, your printer must support the printing of large files.

How do I adjust my preferences with PressReader?

The PressReader software allows you to customize settings to meet your individual requirements: simply select Options > Preferences (Fig. 12a).

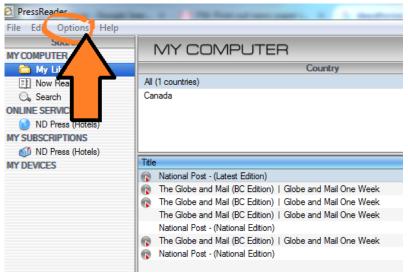

Fig. 12a Modifying Options with PressReader Print Software. (Close-up view.)

The General tab shows your general preferences for account maintenance. You may select when your account should check for new messages from the server. You can also manage the auto cleanup of publications by selecting the number of days you would like to keep them in your Library.

The Print tab allows you to set up the print parameters for your account. Simply select which printer you would like to print from and any additional setting from the Printer Settings button.

The Connection tab allows you to authenticate a proxy server. The Proxy Server is a piece of software that communicates with your web browser and the NewspaperDirect server. The Proxy Server intercepts any requests sent to the NewspaperDirect server and checks if it can fulfill the request itself.

What do I need?

You must have a valid account with an active user name and password to use the Proxy.

How do I set up the Proxy Server on my computer?

- 1. Select Options > Preferences > Connections.
- 2. Identify your proxy server and/or port.
- 3. The proxy user name and password is the same as your PressDisplay account.
